

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

COMMENCEMENT

The records herein were initially gathered for personal satisfaction, and to furnish occupation for one who, according to present-day practice, had passed the period of usefulness in business pursuits; which eschews experience, as being less submissive to authority; and probably more critical, as to questionable methods—introduced to secure excessive gains.

Having become convinced of the futility of attempting to overcome the ironclad dictum, which has established arbitrary age-limits; and being unwilling to enter a state of quiescent nonentity, and self-effacement; or dormant dry-rot; a determination to make "a place in the sun" despite advancing years; supervened.

Seeking then an object worthy of attainment, through possible, continuous, effort; my thoughts reverted to the dear old grandmother, (of blessed memory;) the incarnation of kindly solicitude, and maternal affection; debarred from former activities, by uncontrollable circumstances, and the infirmities of age; and hence relegated to a fixed position, permitting only a twirling of thumbs, and lingual exercise.

Spontaneously these questions arose; From whence came she? and from whom? Possessed of slight knowledge as to the first; and none regarding the last; a problem was discerned which demanded solution. Neither thumbs nor tongue, as occupation, were attractive; wherefore, discovery of the facts underlying the problem, became at once both pursuit and diversion.

The material gathered having overflowed the bounds originally contemplated; its apparent value for succeeding generations, affords an excuse for unloading it, on a JOB-like, ever patient, public; and it is therefore launched upon the everflowing stream of books; of which it has been said "there is no end."

Compilation of the facts herewith submitted, has furnished occupation for a lengthy period; and caused constant appeals to the courtesy and goodwill of a multitude of correspondents, to the most of whom the work is indebted for cheerful and painstaking replies to requests for information, not otherwise obtainable.

Especial recognition is due to Col. Asa Bird Gardiner, U. S. A., retired: for laying aside other important and remunerative matters, to contribute the results of previous investigations, not now possible; without which much that is of vital importance, in a historic sense, would be lacking.

Regarding the Revolutionary record of our mutual Ancestor, the following communication is conclusive:

ORRELL MANOR FARM

Suffern, June 19, 1915.

James A. Phelps, Esq.,
Dear Mr. Phelps:

When I was Professor of Law, at West Point, I went to Boston to the Secretary of State's Office, and saw the original Lexington Alarm Roll, of Capt. Jonathan Davis' Minute Men; and the Secretary in showing it to me, at first did not notice Reuben Willard's name, but soon discovered it interpolated in same ink and handwriting.

Before that I did not know whose Company he had served in, but thereupon made my memorandum. That is how I came to have it. Later the Secretary of State gave me a Certificate which is among my papers, for which I paid $1. My notes were made in the Secretary of State's Office, in July, 1875, and confirmed what Reuben Willard had told his daughters: who told me.

(You see he was not a regular member of the Company, and when the Roll was made up, Capt. Davis who recalled that Reuben Willard had served—interpolated his name.)

I spent many days in Washington, over General Washington's papers, in the State Department, and saw that record of his promotion to Ensign while stationed at Winter Hill, and noted it at the time. Later I found, after diligent search, the date of his promotion. Capt. Jones in whose Company he became Ensign, was continued in service on reorganization, and with his regiment was in the campaign in Canada before Quebec, and in the retreat; the Division then being under Brig. Gen. John Sullivan.

Now adieu, always dear friend,
Faithfully yours,
ASA BIRD GARDINER.

By the way, I have constantly much to do with historical research, especially of the Revolutionary period, and never accept tradition as to service.

Through the voluntarily generous co-operation of Mrs. Duncan McNee of San Francisco, Cal., success became attainable: and Mr. Charles W. Walker, of the Willard Family Association, also rendered appreciated assistance.

Perfection being impossible of attainment, and error everywhere present, deficiencies are to be expected. It is therefore hoped that such as may be discovered will be accorded leniency, and be attributed to human frailty, rather than to lack of truthful purpose.

And as the student, (before whom a new phase of existence is opening,) ends his collegiate experiences at Commencement; now that the period of research is terminated; my labor closes, under the same seemingly incongruous title.

OUR HEROIC ANCESTORS

Patriot, Pioneer and Promoter

Captain REUBEN WILLARD, of Fitchburg, Mass., a gentleman of fine physique and urbane manners, was the youngest son of Thomas Willard, of Harvard; born when each energizing breeze, sweeping down from the North, was increasingly burdened with the murmurings of approaching war. And while he was yet too young to realize the fact, or understand its import, the opening campaign of the French war had taken form.

Tales of the camp and field beguiled him in childhood; and in his youth served to kindle his imagination, arouse his patriotism, and inflame his ambition; thus preparing him for the stirring events to come: and fitting him for the sterner duties of the long and arduous struggle for Independence in which he was destined to bear an honorable part.

Marrying at nineteen, his mother's gift of a farm, at Fitchburg, apparently determined his future; and there he settled down with his young bride.

Goaded beyond endurance by burdensome taxes, and coercive legislation, imposed on them without representation by the English Parliament; and driven into open rebellion by arbitrary action on the part of that Government's officials; the clash at Lexington was but the spark that ignited Liberty's torch; and called every patriotic American—to arms.

For the purpose of consulting his father about personal affairs, the young farmer journeyed to Harvard—on the fateful nineteenth of April 1775—and while there the alarm suddenly startled the community; invoking immediate action. The local Company of Minute Men hastily gathered, and though not a member of that organization, Reuben unhesitatingly joined the ranks, and marched under command of his cousin, Captain Jonathan Davis, to the scene of conflict; meeting the British on their retreat from Concord, and aiding in their discomfiture: his name was therefore added to the roll of those present on that occasion—by Captain Davis.

With his plans shattered and his dreams dispelled he returned to Fitchburg, and on April 27th enlisted in Capt. Josiah Stearn's Co., Col. Ephraim Doolittle's Regt., Mass. Inf., which the Continental Congress put on the regular establishment as the 24th Contl. Foot; and served with it at the battle of Bunker Hill, June 17, where in the absence of Col. and Lt. Col., (another cousin,) Maj. Willard Moore, was killed; in command of the regiment.

During the siege of Boston, they were encamped much of the time on Winter Hill. Being recommended for promotion, Sergeant Willard became Ensign in Capt. John Jones' Co., same regiment, Nov. 27, 1775, receiving a Commission signed by General George Washington. Expiration of enlistments necessitated re-organization, and by reduction of the Army he was by juniority supernumerary; retiring February 1, 1776.

On entering the army, the home in Fitchburg had been closed, and his wife joined relatives at Dorchester, and there July 7, 1775, their first child was born.

On the 26th of June, following, Ensign Willard again entered active service as 2nd Lieut., 2nd Mass. Inf., Col. Jonathan Holman. After the battle of Long Island, General Washington called for additional troops, to serve in New York; and on Sept. 16, 1776, by assignment of Brig. Gen. Oliver Prescott, Lieut. Willard was transferred to the 3rd Mass. Inf., Col. Ezekiel How, (as Qr. Mr.,) under orders to march at once and join the Continental Army at Harlem Heights: where they arrived Oct. 7th, joining the Div. of Maj. Gen. Benjamin Lincoln, and moving to White Plains, N. Y., on the 21st; going into battle there Oct. 26th, and to camp at North Castle, Nov. 9.

In G. O. Hd. qrs., White Plains, Nov. 5, the Commander-in-chief, said he was "very sensible that the time of service of many of the militia will soon expire, but as this is the most interesting and critical part of the campaign and their departure would greatly discourage the other troops, and injure the service, he doubts not that their love of their country will induce them to prolong their stay until the close of the campaign, which must soon happen." The term of enlistment of the Mass. levies would expire Dec. 17, a fact of which General Washington was anxiously aware; and in a communication to Maj. Gen. Charles Lee, Nov. 10, so informed him, in order that he might arrange for the protection of posts south of the passes of the Highlands. He had also written the Mass. Gen. Court, asking for 4000 militia, to take the place of those then under Maj. Gen. Lincoln; who was to remain in command of nine regiments ordered into service pursuant to that request.

Two of the new regiments, from Worcester Co., marched Dec. 17, 1776, via Danbury and Peekskill; that under Col. Nathan Sparhawk, arriving at the latter place Dec. 30, where Lieut. Willard, and others who had decided to remain in service in accordance with the above mentioned G. O. (from the Commanding General) were incorporated therein, and on Jan. 5, proceeded to King's Ferry; and being joined on the 9th by the regiment under Col. Josiah Whitney, crossed the Hudson, and marched through New Jersey to Morristown, there joining the the Continental Army, under General Washington.

On the expiration of their term of enlistment, Mar. 7, 1777, they were released and Lieut. Reuben Willard returned to his little family and farm, at Fitchburg. Beside the two regiments already mentioned two others from the same county, under Cols. Samuel Denny and James Converse, and one from Berkshire Co., under Col. Benjamin Symonds, were included in the Division of Gen. Lincoln; and their long association under such conditions had greatly broadened individual acquaintance, and cemented personal friendships; which were continued through life. With Col. Symonds, particularly, Willard became closely intimate.

Lt. Gen. Burgoyne descending from the North, with his army of Hessians, Canadians, Tories, and Indians, (a motley crew,) sent a detachment under Col. Baume, threatening the small force of N. H. Militia commanded by Brig. Gen. John Stark, who called for volunteers to aid in the defence of Bennington. Col. Ben. Symonds and Lieut. Willard, hastily gathering a nondescript battalion, joined Stark, and took part in the victorious battle at that point, August 16, 1777.

Maj. Gen. Philip Schuyler, in command of the Northern Military Department having called on the Mass. Gen. Court, for Militia to resist Burgoyne's farther advance, a brigade of levies and volunteers was organized, to the command of which Brig. Gen. Jonathan Warner was assigned, who appointed Lieut. Willard, as A. D. C., and hastened to join the Northern army. The battles of Stillwater, and Saratoga, ensued; resulting in the defeat and surrender of Gen. Burgoyne, and disarmament of his troops; (who were eventually deported). That tour of active service continued from Aug. 21 to Nov. 30, 1777; when Captain Willard resigned.

Leaving home in February 1778, to look over his mother's latest gift of timber lands in Vermont; he met Capt. Ebenezer Wood, of Bennington, who had authority to raise a company for service on the Canadian frontier until May; and was strongly urged to go as Lieut. to which he consented; serving under Lt. Col. Samuel Herrick, two months and eleven days, in Vermont.

He remained at home the remainder of that year giving needed attention to his father's affairs; and his own. During the next winter his mother became ill, and failing to recover, passed away May 22, 1779. After her decease his cousin, Capt. Jonathan Davis, on behalf of Col. Samuel Denny, sought his assistance in organizing another regiment, and he finally accepted temporary appointment as Sgt. Maj. June 26, 1779, and on Aug. 12th was commissioned Lieut. A part of the regiment was despatched in the Fall to Claverack, N. Y., remaining two months. The winter passed without incident, and on March 25, 1780, he was honorably discharged at his own request: having served in all, during the five years of sanguinary conflict, a total of over three full years and been present at five battles.

In that record of consistent, continuous, and effective service, for the establishment of American Independence, freely contributed, his numerous living descendants have an inalienable heritage of which they are justly proud.

From the day of his marriage, his mother (all of her elder children having been well provided for,) was to him a "lady bountiful." Beside the farm at Fitchburg she had given him a large tract of heavily timbered land lying on the west side of the Connecticut river, in the town of Rockingham, Windham County, Vt. His brothers were settled on the east side of the river; Capt. Jonathan near Charlestown, N. H.; Thomas and Gibson near each other in the town of Chesterfield, N. H. He had found the property well located when he visited it two years before, and now that the war was evidently about over he began again to plan with a view to the future of his young and growing family.

Before entering upon his last service he had sold the Fitchburg homestead, leaving the Continental currency received therefor with his wife, and now found it nearly worthless; it behoved him, therefore, to take steps to recuperate his fortune; for which purpose the broad acres in the valley of the Connecticut seemingly offered promise of success. Still young and hardy, the pioneer life had no terror for him; and as his wife, through her mother, was in receipt of a constant income in coin, from beyond the sea, the financial requisites appeared assured. That there were adverse possibilities could not be gainsaid, but having escaped those incident to war, his buoyancy of spirit readily overcame any tendency to misgiving; and, within two years he had made an ample clearing, and on a slightly, eastward sloping knoll, erected a substantial log tenement, with other necessary structures; and early in 1782 settled there with his small but robust family; and the future, like their eastward outlook, was radiant.

The daily round of their lives was simple, but constant occupation afforded no lodgment for monotony, and cheerfulness prevailed. In continual procession, the monarchs of the primeval forest bowed their heads and departed; and with returning spring, broader fields were furrowed. Year followed year, while peace and plenty reigned within and without their humble dwelling. To the girl and two boys first lodged therein, there had been added two girls and a boy; and their merry laughter resounded from daydawn to night-fall, banishing discord; and the ideal life supervened.

Peace had been proclaimed, and the newly established Government having passed its experimental stage, worked smoothly; and in the exercise of a legitimate function, caused the people to be numbered; leaving many such secluded families unrecorded. The old year passed away, being followed by its legitimate successor. Hill and vale, clad in the inimitable crystal robe of winter, lay dazzlingly beneath the sun, save where the deeply dark waters of the river flowed silently. Night drew her azure curtains over all, and studded them with brilliants. And all was still. The gentle respirations of the sleepers alone disturbed the atmosphere within the quiet cot, where glowing logs within the broad-throated chimney repelled a chilling frost without. Time flitted by on downy wings. And still they slept.

A dog barked loudly! An awakened child cried lustily. And there was immediate commotion. Half-clad children sought shelter with the kine; and their elders brought forth their choicest possessions; while the glare of flames rising above the sheltering roof-tree, proclaimed disaster. No help was nigh. Their nearest neighbor, was a brother, more than a mile away, beyond the broad river. And ere the day was well launched, that happy home was only a black, unsightly ruin. And of the nine ecstatic years of concord and effort, naught but the memory remained.

Captain Willard, thus defeated in his purpose, removed his family, and remaining chattels to Fitchburg; and when they had been properly housed, set himself resolutely to adjust his affairs. Deciding after due deliberation not to return, he disposed of the property.

The long standing controversy between Massachusetts and New York, as to territorial rights in the "Champlain country" had been adjusted favorably to the latter; the former obtaining, as an equivalent, large tracts in the "southern tier" of New York counties; with which to adjust the unpaid claims of her troops, for their services and sufferings during the Revolution. And as Captain Willard had neither asked nor received compensation, he applied for a grant, and being aided by his army friends, obtained a warrant for a tract in the fertile Chemung valley.

Purposing to settle thereon he left Fitchburg early in February 1792, and with his family and necessary outfit in two large sleighs, started for the new "land of promise." Going "over the mountain" the snow was deep; and progress slow. Coming out into the valley of the Hudson, above Half Moon, expecting to reach Albany at the end of the day, his wife informed him that his daughter, Ruth, who had been ailing since morning, was too ill to go so far, and must stop somewhere and have the attendance of a physician.

Reaching the outskirts of New City soon after, a cottage near the road was observed to be unoccupied, and the Captain at once proceeded to ensconce his family and belongings therein*; and placing his teams under shelter nearby, sought a doctor. That individual quickly announced that the young lady had scarlet fever, and was likely to detain them considerably. Learning on the morrow that the property he had invaded was owned by Col. Jacob A. Lansing, Captain Willard hastened to apprise him of its unceremonious occupancy, and was accorded permission to remain—rent free. Each of the children in turn came down with the fever, and when at length it became possible to resume their journey, sleighs were unsuitable; and the tales of busy-bodies having peopled the Chemung valley with redskins, Mrs. Willard feared for her children.

Warm friendship had grown up meantime between Colonel and Captain, with the result that the former prevailed upon his tenant to join with him in the promotion of the property, later known as Lansingburg, and now part of the city of Troy—and he remained. The innocent first cause of delay soon married; the others matured, and still others came. All eventually married, settling apart. Two of the sons served in the war of 1812.

OUR AMERICAN FOREFATHERS

Major SIMON WILLARD,* progenitor of the great majority of the American Willards, was a man much above the average colonial of his time; and from the outset of his American career occupied a prominent position in the official life of that day; gaining by his energy and acumen the full confidence of his confrères; and high personal regard of the entire community.

From his arrival in America, until the day of his death, no other man was so constantly in contact with public affairs and private activities. No other official performed commensurate service for the general good: or distributed beneficences more widely or wisely.

As has been well said: "he was the chief instrument in settling the town" of Concord, in 1635; and from the date of its governmental organization held a responsible official position therein. And when in 1658, the proprietors and settlers of Lancaster unanimously invited him to become their counselor and guide, they set apart from their choicest lands, an estate of large proportions for his home.

In the management of his personal affairs he was eminently successful; and in the service of the community and colony ever indefatigable.

His military title was not lightly bestowed nor idly worn; but won by exceptional services in quieting or repressing outbreaks of the aborigines; as commander of the colonial forces, by designation of the General Court.

At the outbreak of King Philip's war, though seventy years of age, he mounted his charger and gave himself, regardless of danger and thoughtless of fatigue; he marshalled his neighbors and sons, for the contest with, and final overthrow of, that wily chief; and when death claimed him in April, 1676, his sorrowing people attended en masse the first great military funeral in New England.

In the estimation of the generally accepted historian of that conflict: "no man was ever more fully, or more deservedly, honored in life—and death."

*For Life History, see "Willard Memoir."

HOUSE AT STILL RIVER, (HARVARD,) MASS., BUILT IN 1687, BY HENRY & WILLARD. SOLD TO JOSEPH HASKELL, IN 1734: AND NOW OCCUPIED BY WILLIAM B. HASKELL.

HENRY WILLARD, fourth son of Simon, the immigrant, continued to be a member of his father's household; after his marriage, before attaining his majority. He had become the active, efficient, assistant of his father in the performance of the multifarious duties devolving upon him as an over-burdened public servant; and in the added cares of his personal interests.

Riding with his father's troopers, to succor the beleaguered garrison near Brookfield, they escaped an ambush intended for their destruction, and though his horse was killed, he was unhurt.* After the burning of the Major's mansion, both families removed temporarily to Charlestown.

His father had dealt liberally with his elder sons, and they had established homes for their families elsewhere.

On the occasion of his marriage he was given a fourth part of his father's estate; and after the death of his venerated sire, he built a commodious residence thereon.

At his death in 1701, he left a considerable estate to be distributed in accordance with his will:

HENRY² WILLARD, born June 4, 1655, at Concord, Mass.; married July 18, 1674, at Groton, Mass., Mary Lakin, who died about 1688. He married second, about 1689, Dorcas Cutler, who after his death in 1701, became the wife of Benjamin Bellows.

*Willard Memoir, p. 248. Hist. Harvard, p. 84.

Captain HEZEKIAH WILLARD, fourth son of Henry, at eighteen years of age became the possessor of a handsome estate under the will of his father; lying on Bare Hill, and the adjoining Plumtree meadows—so called—in the town of Lancaster, (now Harvard).

Having erected a comfortable house on the property, he married and settled there; and although that dwelling was destroyed by fire August 31, 1859, its location can still be identified (on the slope of the hill, near the highway to Ayer Junction), a sightly spot affording a charming view of the Still River Valley, and mountain beyond.

In the disturbed conditions then prevailing, a garrison for that section was established, of which he was the commander. That he was of acknowledged importance in the community, is farther attested by the fact that he was elected a Selectman in 1732; and assigned a prominent pew in the church, according to the customs of those days.

With the opening of the French war, public records were increasingly neglected, and for a period of fifty years or more were in many sections practically abandoned; a condition from which we have not fully recovered; wherefore we are without the record of his death.

HEZEKIAH^s WILLARD, born about 1688, at Lancaster, Mass.; married about 1712, Anna, (daughter of Thomas Wilder, born about 1689,) and settled in that part of the town which was included later in Harvard. His wife died January 10, 1746.

THOMAS WILLARD, eldest child of Captain Hezekiah, born amid scenes of vernal beauty, and accustomed through youth to an expansive outlook, was a gentleman of fine physical proportions and attractive personality; broad-shouldered, erect and tall, tipping the scales at two-hundred and forty. Clad in the picturesque costume then prevailing, his was a noticeable figure. Affable, benevolent, and courteous, he was a well-known and highly respected resident of Harvard, Mass., for more than the allotted period of life.

He had joined the church early, and at nineteen married a widow with two children. They were reared tenderly, and settled in life no less comfortably than his own; receiving unimpaired the patrimony left by their father.

Of his twelve children, but five attained maturity. They married and deserted the home; and after seven years of loneliness he married as second wife, a widow, whose departed husband left her in straitened circumstances with six young children. With her and this third brood, in 1786, he too left the place of his birth, settling at Chesterfield, N. H., where two of his sons had settled. There he dwelt until his death in 1799.

Amos Morrell; promoted 1st Lt. August 24, 1779; appointed Qr. Mr. July 20, 1780; and honorably discharged April 25, 1782.* His service included the battles of Stillwater and Saratoga.

Returning to New Hampshire, he later married and settled in Sullivan County, N. H., near the Connecticut river, opposite to Captain Reuben's place in Rockingham, Vt. He was still there after the latter was burned out, and had removed.

Proper records had not then been established in the new settlements, and consequently the date of his marriage, and name of his wife cannot be ascertained; it is known, however, that a son was born and named Jonathan, who died young; no farther records of his family are obtainable.

It is also known that he was an original member of the "Cincinnati of Rhode Island"; and that his Commissions are in possession of the General Society.

Her's was a life of recurring anxiety. Born within the sound of the guns on Bunker Hill; with father, grand-father and five uncles engaged in Revolution; two brothers and other near relatives, in the war of 1812; passing through the period of conflict with Mexico; the coming of Civil war brought constant anxiety; and ebbing vitality wrought ultimate death.

ALLIED FAMILIES

Lancaster, Mass., was but a scattered Settlement when the Willards became residents, and began their campaign for its enlargement. Sixty years of united effort had largely increased their numbers and by inter-marriage its population became closely related. Thomas Wright, a new-comer, found boon companions in Thomas Sawyer and Thomas Willard, and by their constant association they were known as the "three Toms." Wright secured a home lot from Samuel Willard, and in 1829 married Abigail, daughter of Caleb Sawyer, and settled down. During the "French War," the three friends were members of the same military organization, thus cementing their friendship more closely. In 1760, the three Wright boys were with the force that captured Crown Point and Ticonderoga. Their mother dying the same year, Thomas and Caleb came home, but Sawyer Wright stopped at Brattleboro, Vt., and there married Deborah Knapp (born at Newton, Mass.) and is believed to have settled originally in the Champlain country. British and Indian forays, during the Revolution made that section unsafe, and the census of 1790, records the family at Brattleboro, except the oldest son.

BIOGRAPHICAL

TIMOTHY³ GIBSON, of Stow, Mass., was born in 1679, being a grandson of John¹ Gibson, who came from England, with his wife, Rebecca, in 1634, and settled in Cambridge. She died in 1661, and he married Joan Prentice, a widow, the next year. His son John² Gibson, born 1641, married Rebecca Errington, and they were the parents of Timothy³ Gibson, who married Rebecca Gates, of Marlboro, born in 1682. Their daughter Sarah, born 1710, married first Jeremiah Farnsworth, of Groton, and after his death became the wife of Thomas⁴ Willard, of Harvard.

DANIEL⁵ PARKHURST, father of Catherine, was descended from George¹ Parkhurst, who with his wife Susannah, came to Watertown, Mass., and was made a freeman in 1643. Daniel married Martha Gamage, of Cambridge, daughter of Joshua and Deborah (Wyeth) Gamage, of Cambridge; whose grandfather Nicholas¹ Wyeth, came to New England in 1645.

A TALE OF DISASTER—AND ENDURANCE

MARTHA, fourth daughter of Captain Reuben Willard, like her sister, Ruth, was a person of warm affection, and firmness of character; having been twice widowed, she had developed large executive ability, self-reliance, and strong determination: and, as "Aunt Patty," was known and welcomed throughout the entire family connection.

Early in 1854, accompanied by her orphaned niece, Emily Marble, she had journeyed to Illinois, to visit the children of her deceased brother, Reuben; and with the coming of November started for her eastern home. At Chicago she took passage on the Propellor Bucephalus for Buffalo, the trip by lake being customary at that time; they left Chicago on the 4th for Milwaukee where they took on other cargo, and after leaving that port entered without perturbation the expected routine of their homeward journey.

AD INTERIM

On November 21, the Buffalo Express, reprinted from the Detroit Tribune, the report of Capt. Alexander, of the Bucephalus, detailing the events preceding the foundering of that vessel; which were, in brief, as follows:

"Left Chicago Nov. 4th, with 14,000 bushels Corn, and three passengers; to take on balance of cargo at Milwaukee. After leaving that place the weather became unfavorable and so continued until Sunday the 12th, after leaving Presque Isle the wind which had been West changed suddenly to Northeast, with light snow; about 3 p. m. the barometer began falling rapidly, presaging a storm, with increasing snow, and by 5 p. m. the wind blew a gale. Shortly after 6 p. m. the foremast broke and went over the side; and soon after both forward gangways were stove in by the seas. Shifting of cargo caused a strong list to starboard, and the great quantity of water that flooded the deck made it necessary to throw over the deckload. Before that was accomplished the after gangway was carried away, and the middle one soon followed. The boat was put before the wind and an effort made to close the gangways again. The after one being small was fastened up, but the larger ones could not be closed. By 8 p. m. the deckload was nearly off, and there was a slight lull. On attempting to resume our course in the heavy sea the list was so great that the vessel strained heavily, and every sea lifted her guards around the stern, letting in such a quantity of water as threatened to extinguish our fires. Our only salvation was to keep her before the wind, and our helm was put hard to starboard. The wind changed again and was blowing a hurricane with the heaviest seas ever seen on the lakes. About midnight there was a crash and examination showed that the rudder had broken away and all control was lost. It only remained to prepare the boats for the final event. The largest was put in charge of Mr. Stoddard, first mate, which with the passengers and its crew, contained ten persons; the other two holding seven each. The first got away safely, but the second was swamped; and as the vessel plunged stern first the last boat was nearly carried down with her, but filled with water, remained on the surface. By strenuous exertions and constant bailing, the larger boat was kept afloat, and driven before the wind toward the Canadian shore through the night and storm; landing on that rough, bleak coast soon after daylight, where a fire was speedily started as a beacon for the others, and to prevent perishing from exposure in the freezing cold. The Captain in the smaller boat reached shore, was capsized in the breakers, barely escaping with his life. The other boat was never seen afterward. Of the twenty-four persons involved in the disaster, ten were lost."

THE TALE RETOLD

A never-to-be-forgotten Experience

The sole survivor of that nerve-racking event, with the added experiences of sixty passing years, still retains vivid recollection of all that transpired on that distressing occasion; and recently recounted the story of the frightful night. Emily (Marble) Morey now residing at Waterford, N. Y., says that they had stopped at Mackinaw, where there was a dance at the hotel and after passing Presque Isle the storm came on; becoming violent about 2 a. m. Soon the table and furniture were crashing from side to side, and finally the stove too broke loose from its fastenings. When the captain found that they must leave the vessel he put "Aunt Patty" and Emily in charge of Mate Stoddard who had the best boat and crew, which was made ready for launching from the forward gangway on the main deck. It was pushed off just as the vessel was about to go down, and was filled with water when she made her final plunge; everyone being wet to the skin; constant bailing alone kept them afloat. Stoddard proved to be an able seaman and when they reached the dangerous Canadian shore, piloted them skilfully through the breakers and beached his boat on the sand. Placing "Aunt Patty" on the back of a sturdy sailor, and Emily in charge of young Thaddeus Emmons, instructing them, when a great wave receded, to jump and run up the beach before the next wave could catch them. All having reached high ground safely, he sent some to gather fuel and soon had a brisk fire burning, to counteract the intense cold. Men from a fishing station nearby, seeing the fire came through the woods and when they found that women were in the party, insisted on taking them to their log cabin, some little distance inland; where their wives quickly supplied them with dry garments, and prepared a warm breakfast for them. Captain Alexander came to the cabin later to dry out the ship's papers, and assure himself of the comfort of his passengers. After remaining there a week, and receiving the best possible care, the Captain engaged the fishermen, with their larger boat to take the party ninety miles across the lake to Port Huron. He endeavored to persuade "Aunt Patty" to remain with the fisher-folk until weather conditions were better, but she insisted on going with the party; to which he reluctantly consented. Starting early the following morning, they bade their kind hosts farewell, and lying prone on the bottom of the broad fishing boat began the long passage. It was still storming and the flying spray quickly drenched their clothes which soon froze. Chilled and stiffened by their long confinement in an uncomfortable position, they could scarcely move when they reached the American port at 8 p. m. On reaching a hotel, they were denied either warm food or spirits to stimulate their chilled circulation; and Stoddard soon found other quarters, to which they at once removed. There every comfort was freely accorded, without question, as it was well known that they had lost everything; and there they remained another week, when the Captain of the Propellor Buckeye offered them free passage to Buffalo; which they thankfully accepted. At mealtime, after leaving Port Huron, the Captain insisted on their going to the table and before the dinner was finished explained their case; took up a collection for their benefit, which enabled them to reach friends on their arrival at Buffalo.

The Propellor Mayflower which passed through the same storm safely, being unable to give any account of the disaster, it was ten days before it became known that any survivors had been able to reach land.

Not until the end of November was it possible for "Aunt Patty" and her charge to reach relatives at Buffalo.

JOHN WRIGHT, of whose early life little is known, except that he passed his youth in the Adirondack wilds; acquired sufficient education for the requirements of a life of usefulness; and following the natural bent of the Sawyers and Wrights, became a capable mill-wright and ship carpenter.

Attracted by business opportunities to the new towns growing up in the Hudson valley, he found employment at Lansingburg, N. Y., and in July, 1793, married Ruth, eldest daughter of Captain Reuben Willard, and settled in Waterford; and there most of their children were born.

Between the mills, factories, and numerous river craft, he found constant occupation, and with the passing of years became well known to men in all lines of business, as a reliable workman in both branches of his business.

In 1822, Henry Burden, the Ironmaster, became connected with the Troy Iron & Nail Factory; which had been organized in 1811; and at once instituted a series of improvements. The slitting mill and nail machines were driven by two small waterwheels, (one on each end of the power shaft), and after the construction of a greater dam, and pond, on Wynantskill, he determined to build a great Rolling Mill, and utilize all available water.

About 1827, he devised a monster waterwheel, entrusting its erection to Mr. Wright, who journeyed to the upper courses of the Hudson with men and teams; found a giant oak suited to his purpose; felled it, and from its massive trunk took a large section; transporting it in winter on sleds to the foot of the fall; where it was fashioned into the shaft of an overshot wheel, sixty feet in diameter, twenty-two feet broad, with thirty-six buckets six feet deep; which when completed was declared to be the greatest of its kind in the known world: furnishing for many years motive power for the entire plant. That wheel was displaced about 1850, by an iron-latticed wheel, of equal dimensions, which for more than fifty years attracted interested visitors to those works; that too, having been superseded by greater steam power, has fallen a victim to the "tooth of time."

In 1833, Mr. Burden undertook the building of a large river steamer on a catamaran model, the twin hulls of which (like immense cigars,) were also constructed by Mr. Wright; but the unfortunate "Helen of Troy" had but a brief career. Later he built for Dr. Dubias, the hull of a small vessel which was propelled by a three-bladed screw wheel; she was sent down the river to New York, thence by inside waterways through New Jersey, to Philadelphia; and a few years afterward went up the Red river to Texas.

Removing about 1839, with his youngest son to a farm in the town of Sodus, Mr. Wright lived a quiet, but active life until 1851, when after a hearty dinner he seated himself near an open window, and was suddenly stricken; dying without recovering consciousness. Mrs. Zorada (Baker) Ackerman, at whose home he expired, was a sister of Capt. John J. Baker, husband of Mr. Wright's daughter Catherine.

SIMON FAIRMAN, Inventor
1792-1867

SIMON FAIRMAN, Inventor, was born at Killingly, Conn., in that historic period when the revolted Western colonies, after a youth of military tutelage, had successfully thrown off the yoke of maternal discipline; turned both mental and physical energies to the solution of the numberless problems of independent existence; with the same persistence that had won, with inadequate accessories, inalienable rights.

His advent in a community noted for thrift, and their ready adaptation of present means to the attainment of desirable ends; with his endowment of mechanical genius, of a high order have given world-wide use to many of his inventions, of acknowledged value.

Watt, and his steam engine; and Whitney, with his cotton-gin; were his exemplars; and the universal adoption of his mechanism for shuttle throwing, (first introduced by him in the looms of cotton and woolen mills at Troy, N. Y.) gave equal impetus to the weaving industry—in all lands.

In these days, when automobiles demand the constant vigilance of the travelers, on all roads; few people know that a century has passed since he built and operated, on the streets and over the hills surrounding the same city, the first steam-propelled stagecoach, with pronounced success; nor that from the intense application and labor involved in its personal construction, its trial trip was followed by his prostration, and practical blindness, from over exertion, for several years; during which long illness, the neglected coach became a dismantled wreck; and when he was again able to resume business, other pressing problems required his immediate attention.

His previous achievements, not being patented had produced no revenue, and an increasing family required food and clothing. His later inventions (though of less general importance) having been protected by Patents, brought satisfactory returns; and since his demise have proved an incessant source of wealth to his children; and theirs.

His spiral self-centering Chucks, patented in 1840, are to be found in machine-shops everywhere and other mechanical devices of his invention are extensively in use.

JOHN EDWARD GRIFFITHS, following the bent of his English ancestry, was an ironworker of unusual ability; which enabled him to secure large contracts, as an operator of railroad, and merchant, iron-rolls: in the best Rolling Mills throughout the country.

Being naturally of a roving disposition, he became well acquainted with the proprietors of all the principal Iron Works, in both the Northern and Southern States; and when orders slackened in one section, he quickly transferred his activities to another; being often away from his family for extended periods.

AUSTIN F. CUSHMAN was born at Belchertown, Mass., June 18, 1830. (The American Cushmans being descendants of Robert Cushman, who was an active member of the Company that purchased and equipped the "Mayflower" and "Speedwell" in 1620: himself coming to America in the "Fortune," in 1621.)

His childhood and youth were passed in that quiet and staid New England village, where his father was in business as a Carriage Maker. And in its schools he acquired an education that sufficed for all requirements of a busy and useful life.

After mastering the trade of his forebears, he added Pattern Making to the list of his mechanical accomplishments, and finding employment at Stafford, Conn.—the early home of his grandfather, he remained there for several years: marrying a daughter of Simon Fairman, the Inventor, whose Chuck Works were located in West Stafford.

Incidentally acquiring a knowledge of his father-in-law's business, his natural business sagacity led him to remove his family to Hartford, in 1859; where he soon established himself in the manufacture of Chucks.

Strict attention to the business, with wise economy won success; resulting in its constant enlargement, with abundant prosperity and final incorporation.

Of a genial social disposition, he formed strong friendships; and kindly sympathy for those less fortunate was frequently manifested by liberal financial assistance.

At the beginning of the present century, his failing eyesight caused him, more and more, to shift the burden of business details to the shoulders of trusted employees, and his only son: though he maintained constant personal supervision of his affairs, in general.

Increasing infirmity eventually compelled him to put all care aside; and at the end of November 1914, as the shades of evening drew his last earthly Sabbath to its close, he passed into Eternal Peace.

Col. ASA BIRD GARDINER, LL.D. U. S. A. (retired), is a descendant in the eighth generation from George Gardiner, Gent., who came to America in the "Fellowship" from Bristol, England, arriving at Boston in June, 1637; with his wife—Sarah Slaughter—and three children. They removed to Providence in 1638, and finally settled at Newport, R. I.

Born and educated in New York City, he graduated at the College of the City of New York in 1859; studied Law at Columbia University, and was admitted to N. Y. Bar in November, 1860.

Joining a N. Y. Regt. early in the Civil War, he made an enviable record as an officer; was wounded in 1863; received a Medal of Honor, for gallant and meritorious services; entered the Regular Army, in 1866.

He was Professor of Law at West Point for four years, and Assistant Secretary of War for two; counsel for Gens. Grant and Sheridan, at the Gen. Warren Court of Inquiry; and Government counsel in the Fitzjohn Porter case, as also in the Cadet Whitaker matter.

After his retirement in 1888, he turned his attention to politics, and became District Attorney for New York County in 1897; and since leaving that office has been a prominent legal practitioner in both State and U. S. Courts.

He is Gen. Sec. of the Cincinnati; President of Cincinnati of R. I.; a Founder of the Sons of the Revolution; and connected with many other military and social organizations and Clubs. Professional engagements, and political conferences, leave him scant opportunity for rest at his country residence near Suffern, N. Y. By a special Act of the Legislature he holds rank as Bvt. Maj. Gen. N. Y. Militia.

Full details of his Army connections, and Civil activities, are to be found in the Army Register; Heitman's; and "Who's Who," in America.

Captain SAMUEL WHITING born about 1816, at Hempstead, N.Y., entered early on a seafaring life, and by native ability rose to a commanding position; but not without acquiring also undesirable capacity for exhilarating fluid refreshments that have ever been the bane of sailors' lives. While he could not properly be classed as a confirmed inebriate, he was addicted to periodical lapses from sobriety; quite often culminating in extreme hilarity. Nevertheless, when "on duty" he was active, efficient and urbane as an officer; agreeable and courteous as a companion; firm and steadfast as a friend.

While in command of the steamship "Marion" plying regularly between New York and Charleston, S. C., during the exciting period which followed the presidential election of 1860, and the inauguration of President Lincoln, he attested his loyalty to his country by refusing to hoist the Palmetto flag at the demand of the hotheads of the South; running his ship out of that southern harbor under the "stars and stripes" and saluting the beleaguered force under Major Anderson, as he passed. For which act the ship's owners at once demanded an explanation, (by mail soon after his arrival in New York harbor,) in the following communication:

Charleston, S. C. December 29, 1860.

Capt. Samuel Whiting;

Dear Sir:

On your departure from here this morning, did you when abreast of Fort Sumter, hoist or have hoisted, at your ship's peak, the American ensign or the Palmetto flag. Great excitement exists here that it was the American ensign; and that it was hoisted, and then immediately dipped or lowered, soon after the Federal flag was hoisted at Fort Sumter.

My attention was called while on the wharf, and a flag was seen by several parties—but what denomination we were unable to ascertain.

Please write me, or telegraph, and let me know if it was the Palmetto or American ensign: and if you took any passengers from this port.

(Signed) J. M. TUOMEY.

The "N. Y. Tribune" of January 7, 1861, reported that the answer sent by Capt. Whiting was "that he was born under the Stars and Stripes; had always sailed under them; and with the blessing of God, would die under them."

On returning with his ship to her home port, he was informed that the Governor had requisitioned the vessel, for special State service; and that he might remain as sailing master, if he desired, under a Master to be appointed by the State. Declining to remain, he returned to New York by rail.

Such conspicuous loyalty was not to pass unnoticed, and in June following he was appointed U. S. Consul at Nassau, New Providence.

DUNCAN MCNEE, a Canadian, was born at Huntingdon, province of Quebec, and after the death of his father, the family removed to California; going via Panama, in 1864.

Completing his education in the Boys' High School in San Francisco, he obtained a position in the United States Land Office; attaining the Chief Clerkship, and at the end of twenty years' service, resigned in 1888.

The experience thus gained, and the consequent intimate knowledge as to the most desirable tracts held by the government, enabled him wisely to invest his earnings, from time to time, until he became, in the language of an editorial writer, the possessor of choice properties, in every county in the state.

Having severed his official connection with the Land Department, he devoted his energy and time to the improvement and disposal of his numerous interests; many of which proved to be of great value; gaining for him recognized position among the financiers of the Golden State.

Government contracts and profitable investments materially enlarged his capital and influence, while he was yet, comparatively, a young man.

His considerable holdings of realty at the National Capital, were no less fortunate than his mining properties, and oil lands, in his home state; and prosperity assailed him on every hand.

But, the All Conqueror had marked him for his own; and called him hence in the prime of life; he passed away at Santa Rosa, Cal., January 19, 1913, in the home of his youngest son.

EDWARD BROWN GRIFFITHS, became a practical printer in his youth, and is at the present time conducting a successful business in that line, in San Francisco, Cal.

During our Civil War, he enlisted in Co. M 4th Mich. Cavalry, being the youngest man in that company. He served through the war; was wounded at New Hope Church; and after his discharge obtained employment at Detroit; going later to Port Huron, where he established himself in business.

About 1882, he closed there and removed with his family; joining his mother and other relatives in California.

In 1887, as a Charter member, he joined Liberty Post, G. A. R., and has served as its Commander; and on the staff of the Department Commander; and Gen. Thomas V. Lawler, Commander-in-Chief, appointed him to a like position on the General Staff, in 1895.

JAMES DANIEL PHELPS, having served three apprenticeships, before reaching his majority, had become an expert in all branches of woodworking; his services being equally in demand for the erection of fine staircases; building fine coaches; and making fine furniture; the molded hand-rails and balusters for the first, being of as choice wood, and no less highly polished than the latter.

When in 1833, Henry Burden of Troy, N. Y., was seeking a master workman to construct fine upperworks on his elegant and speedy steamboat, for the Hudson river passenger service, he learned at New Haven, Conn., of the qualifications of Mr. Phelps, and induced him to go to Troy; to take charge of the work on the cabins and stairways of the unfortunate "Helen": which soon after her successful trial, was wrecked near Castleton, N. Y.

On the completion of that work he concluded to remain in the rapidly growing young city, and establish himself as a Building Contractor.

The character of the work he had done on the steamer brought him business, and secured him the contract for a block of dwellings, in the southern part of the city from Judge Coon. He married and the future seemed bright. A disastrous fire destroyed his shop, and ruined his large collection of valuable tools; and in 1841 he removed to New York City, where he found employment for a year. Hearing of great opportunities for advancement at Buffalo, he removed to that city in the Fall of 1842, where his brother-in-law, Malden Wright, was already established in business, his own brother, Eugene, and other relatives arriving there the following spring. There he maintained his home for twenty years.

The schools of the city, like a majority of the schools throughout the country, at that time, were furnished with plain wooden benches and desks, stained only with the grime of use; and of varying lengths. At a school meeting in the district where he lived, (old number six,) it was decided to refurnish their school. Making a sample desk, for two scholars, which was shown at the next meeting, it was immediately adopted, and they were built and installed during vacation. Being the first combining both seat and desk, they attracted attention; were adopted elsewhere and came into general use.

The panic of 1857, caused suspension of business in all building lines, and after a short sojourn at Toledo, O., and Erie, Pa., he went to Detroit, Mich. There his health gave out and he passed away December 8, 1865.

WILLIAM HENRY GOODRICH was unfortunately fatherless at birth; and was reared under the kindly care of a stepfather who amply fulfilled the duties he had assumed.

By his advice and aid, on reaching manhood, young Goodrich engaged in transportation on the Erie canal, between Troy and Albany; and later on the Hudson river, between those cities and New York.

A quiet, persistent, man of exemplary habits, he invested his savings, and earnings in barges and sailing sloops; and became a well-known and highly respected operator of such craft, for many years.

CAPTAIN MICHAEL BROWN, came to America at the age of fourteen: he was the youngest son of Dr. Edward Brown, of Cork, Ireland. After completing his education at Troy, N. Y., he became interested in local politics and in 1840 was elected an Alderman.

Having purchased desirable property in the southern part of the city he built a commodious residence thereon; and securing a contract from Mr. Henry Burden for the operation of the Nail Department of the Troy Iron & Nail Works, he steadily increased the output of that department, and later supplemented that contract with one for the distribution and transportation of the entire product of the Burden mills between Troy, Albany and New York Cities.

Energetic and indefatigable attention to business, and wise, conservative husbanding of the resources resulting therefrom, gained him influential prominence as a man of ability, foresight, and financial strength.

In 1854 he closed up his business, disposed of his realty, and removed with his remaining family to Michigan; purchasing a farm near Niles, which he sold after the death of his wife; joining his children in California. A Christian gentleman of the old school, with practical views of life, and devoid of racial prejudice; he often declared that "there are good and bad among all nations, except the Irish, and they are bad and worse"—the while smiling broadly.

GENERAL JOHN P. COOK, grandson of the first Governor of Illinois; and also of the first Senator of that State; was Mayor of Springfield, Ill., and later Sheriff of Sangamon county; an intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln, for whom he stumped the State, in the presidential contest of 1860; and Quartermaster General of the Illinois Militia.

On the outbreak of our Civil War, he went to the front as Colonel of the First Illinois Infantry. At the siege of Fort Donelson, he was in command of the Third Brigade of Gen. Charles F. Smith's Division and received the officer bearing the surrender of that fortification.

He was made a Brigadier General in 1862; and afterwards brevetted Major General: received a sword from his State at the hands of Governor Yates; was a member of the Legislature after the War; and appointed Indian Agent, by the President in 1879.

He was the first Adjutant General of the G. A. R., and a member of the Loyal Legion: and passed away at the age of eighty-five at Ransom, Mich., leaving his second wife, with two sons and two daughters.

European Ancestry as Stated in George Willard, of Yarmouth, Mass.
which was Compiled by the late James LeBaron Willard.

The Willard family is said to be of very ancient origin; and has been traced through England, France, and Italy to OTHON, Count Bianchi di Villard, of Naples, in 1230; whose brother Humbert was of Rome: and to him after the death of Othon, in 1240, the title descended.

Being closely allied to the Pope, the German persecution drove him from his ancestral domain in 1248, and with Pope Innocent IV, he removed to Lyons, where he died in 1260, leaving two sons, the younger of whom Humbert, removed to Marseilles, and in 1267 was made a Cardinal by Pope Clement IV: his son Humbert being made Commander of the Papal Army in 1306; and fighting in the Crusades, being with the Knights of St. John at the taking of Rhodes, in 1309.

His elder brother, Othon, holder of the title, went to Rouen; and thence later to Caen; there retaining only the name of Villard. Falling under suspicion of disloyalty to the Government in 1310, he fled with his family to England, settling in Sussex.

There for services rendered to the Royal Cause, Henri Count Willard received from King Edward III grants of land in Sussex and Kent; was appointed a Magistrate by King Richard, and Deputy Lieutenant of the "Five Counties," and granted Armorial Bearings: which are still borne by the family in England.

GEORGE¹ WILLARD, son of Richard of Horsmonden, Eng., came to Boston from London in the ship "Susan & Ellen" in May, 1634, went to Barnstable soon after, and settled finally at Yarmouth. In 1638 he removed to Scituate, and there took "the oath of fidelity"; he became a member of the "Scituate Troop." *

His wife, said to have been a younger sister of Rev. Henry Dunster, first President of Harvard College, was born in Lancashire, Eng., in 1620: that her birth record has not been discovered, does not disprove that statement. There is no evidence that George Willard, half brother of Simon,¹ was ever in Maryland: 'perhaps' proves nothing.

GEORGE LAWTON WILLARD, was for over thirty years a merchant in the wholesale Dry-Goods district of New York City. He refused political office but was a director in several Banks, and president of the World Life Insurance Co. of Brooklyn, N. Y., and interested in many of the charitable institutions of that city. Was a member of the Mercantile Library, the Brooklyn Institute, and the Long Island Historical Society.

JAMES L'BARON, father of Mrs. George L. Willard, was a banker in Bristol, R. I., and with James DeWolf was largely interested in vessels engaged in East India, and African trade. They were also part owners of the privateers "Yankee" and "McDonough" during the war of 1812. He was born in Plymouth in 1780; his wife was descended from Roger Williams, Governor of Rhode Island in 1654.

JAMES L'BARON WILLARD, was a Psi Epsilon graduate of Columbia College in 1854; he entered the Wholesale Dry-Goods business, which he followed for over fifty years. Was a member of the societies of Colonial Wars, Sons of the Revolution; Sons of the American Revolution; War of 1812; and the New York State; Connecticut; Long Island; and Newport, Historical Societies: and after his retirement from business was the Historian of the Mayflower Descendants, State of New York; and Associate Historian of the Order of Colonial Governors.

VERNON HOWLAND BROWN, was born in Boston, November 17, 1832, and commenced his business career with the old shipping house of Sampson & Tappan; becoming later a member of the firm of Vernon Brown & Son. Those firms in the days of America's greatest merchant-marine success, were owners of the foremost lines of Clipper Ships; carrying our flag into all the great ports of the world. In his later years he became the American Manager of the Cunard Steamship Co. He was a Director of the Hanover National Bank of New York; the Panama Railroad; and other financial and industrial institutions; and Governor of the New England Society.

CHRONOLOGY OF THE GEORGE WILLARDS

The late James Le Baron Willard, a lineal descendant of George¹ Willard, naturally was greatly interested in all matters pertaining to that branch of the family; and having had experience in genealogical research, had acquired quite a reputation for work in that line.

As no complete record of that branch of the Willard family exists, it seems desirable that material which he compiled should be put into a permanently available form for future use.
